Extended Description :As the arts become more and more integrated with technologies of design and simulation, and those technologies, in turn, are products of scientific advances, the boundary lines between art, science, and technology have become increasingly harder to define. Moreover, the arts not only have aesthetic and entertainment values but are also used in the service of political agendas, thereby also implicitly politicizing science and technology as they shape the arts. This course is an in-depth examination of the changing relationships between the arts, science, and technology. It begins with an overview of the history of the arts and how they have become increasingly shaped by new technologies. It then discusses key conceptual issues related to the topic, using illustrations from the contemporary arts world. Finally, the course focuses on current trends that are shaping new connections between art, technology, and science.
